Abstract

Communication is an important factor in any organization, including a volleyball club. It can affect one of the most important segments in the club, interpersonal relationships. Each volleyball club has its own technique and way of communicating and working. Communication affects the technique of athletes and resolving disagreements and in the end final results of the club. Basis of this work is collecting data about quality of communication in the club and its analyzes. In the first part of paper, theoretical part, will be explained the forms of communication within the volleyball club and the importance of teamwork, motivation and listening. The second part of the paper is based on research data collection on communication within a volleyball club located in Ivanec, a town near Varaždin. The importance of communications will be determined by the results of proven research that will simultaneously show the state of communications within the volleyball club along with its impact on the overall business of the club.
